Building a new GitLab Docs site with Nanoc, GitLab CI, and GitLab Pages

How we built the new GitLab Docs portal from the ground up

We recently rebuilt docs.gitlab.com from scratch. Where previously the site was generated with a simple Ruby script, we now use a proper static site generator.

Check out the improvements we made, the structure we now use to deploy from specific directories in multiple repositories to a single website, build with GitLab CI and deployed with GitLab Pages. Now our documentation has a nicer look and feel, is more pleasant to read through, and simpler and quicker to maintain.
